AFOSI spouse earns Military Spouse of the Year

By Wayne Amann

Air Force Office of Special Investigations
Public Affairs

QUANTICO, Va. (AFNS) – Brittany Boccher, the spouse of Master Sgt. Adam Boccher, an Air Force Office of Special Investigations special agent, from Detachment 327 at Little Rock Air Force Base, Arkansas, had a memorable year in 2016.

Boccher was selected as the 2016 Little Rock AFB Military Spouse of the Year and the AFOSI Deborah Law Spouse of the Year. That was only the beginning.

Her momentum snowballed in 2017 when she was named the Air Force Spouse of the Year for the second time, and culminated with her earning the Armed Forces Insurance Military Spouse of the Year Award. The announcement was made May 12, 2017, during the annual awards luncheon ceremony at the U. S. Chamber of Commerce in Washington, D.C., on Military Spouse Appreciation Day which honors the commitment and sacrifice of military spouses everywhere.

Brittany accepted the award in front of more than 250 of the nation's top military supporters. The next morning she appeared before a national television audience in New York City on "FOX and Friends."

"Brittany is one more example of just how special this OSI family really is, and we're very fortunate to have her as one of us," wrote Brig. Gen. Keith M. Givens, the AFOSI commander, in a congratulatory enterprise-wide email. "She is one impressive spouse, mother and volunteer."

Her road to the Defense Department award included her second straight Little Rock AFB MSOY award, followed by winning at the Top 18 Regional level and then at the Branch (Air Force) level.

The overall winner was decided by a professional judging panel and a record online national vote of more than 100,000 ballots cast which ended March 2 for the six service branch winners (Air Force, Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard and National Guard). This year's competition began with more than 1,000 nominations spanning the Defense Department.

"There are so many outstanding Air Force spouses who are dedicated to making exceptional changes in our military community," Boccher said early in the competition. "To be recognized among them is an honor in itself and to be awarded the overall Air Force Spouse of the Year is an absolute privilege which I humbly accept."

The Armed Forces Insurance Military Spouse of the Year program recognizes military spouses' important contributions and unwavering commitment to the military community and our country. Judging criteria includes: impact on community change, volunteer efforts, personal sacrifice, professional pursuits, goals and specific efforts to support the military community.

Boccher, a self-proclaimed "seasoned Air Force spouse of 11 years," along with the other five MSOY contenders submitted profiles of themselves for judging. Among her litany of 2016 accomplishments, many significantly improved the lives of others.

She is president of the Little Rock AFB Spouses' Club and helped increase participation by 800 percent resulting in the club stocking the on-base food pantry to maximum capacity; providing backpacks for more than 300 military children; collecting and packaging more than 75 care packages for deployed troops; and supporting the Boccher participated in the signing of House Bill 1162, the Retired Military Tax Cut in Arkansas. Its passage creates tax relief for military retirees beginning in January 2018.

She is the founder and director of the Down Syndrome Advancement Coalition "Tank Filled Life" project, educating and advocating for individuals with Down syndrome. The coalition partners with active Down syndrome organizations in Arkansas on behalf of Down syndrome families, like the Bouchers themselves. Back on LRAFB she identified a need for and teamed with base officials to achieve a playground with accessible therapeutic swings supporting children with physical disabilities.

Boccher holds a Bachelor of Science degree in community health education and kinesiology and a Master's Degree in nonprofit leadership and management which enabled her to establish two personal businesses plus mentor and encourage nearly a dozen fellow military spouses on becoming small business owners.

"I'm thankful for those who believe in me and encourage me to continue my work mentoring spouses, fighting for inclusion and equal rights and opportunities for people with special needs," she said. "It's beyond gratifying to represent the Air Force and be trusted by so many of my peers to represent our wonderful military spouse community."

Boccher is the third Air Force spouse and second AFOSI spouse to win at the DOD-level since the award's inception in 2008. Lori Bell took the honor in 2010 and Jeremy Hilton, spouse of then Lt. Col. (now Col.) Renae M. Hilton (soon to be commander of AFOSI's 4th Field Investigations

Mobility Airmen provide structure to C-130 fleet

By Airman 1st Class Kevin Sommer Giron
19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

As the workhorse of the U.S. Air Force, the C-130 dominates the open skies of Little Rock Air Force Base. However, the fleet shares airspace with old feathery allies.

As spring begins, birds begin to migrate across the country. During the season, the airways are bustling with activity, and the reality of collisions between birds and aircraft are more prevalent.

Although there are programs, like the Bird/Wildlife Aircraft Strike Hazard program, which help reduce the number of bird strikes, accidents still occur.

When they do, the 19th Maintenance Squadron Aircraft Structural Maintenance Airmen are tasked with repairing the C-130 airframe.

"We repair the physical damage to the aircraft's infrastructure," said Tech. Sgt. Anthony Duffin, 19th AMXS Aircraft Structural Maintenance Shop day shift lead. "From cracks to tears, we fix it all and repaint it."

A recent collision challenged the structural Airmen to perform a higher-level repair that would make an aircraft serviceable 270 days ahead of schedule.

Staff Sgt. Christopher Lahey, 19th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron Aircraft Structural Maintenance craftsman, and his team repaired a leading edge for a C-130J back wing May 9 at Little Rock Air Force Base. The structural Airmen performed a high-level repair, which made an aircraft serviceable 270 days ahead of schedule.

Their task was to create a leading edge for a horizontal stabilizer from scratch, using Little Rock AFB resources and saving the base thousands of dollars in repairs.

The leading edge is the front section of the C-130J back wing. It's a vital piece that allows aircraft to keep its lift during flight.

"This one was challenging because the horizontal stabilizer doesn't usually get hit," Duffin said. "It's harder to fix because it's more compressed than the wing."

Due to the uncommon damage, ordering a replacement part would've taken more than 250 days and cost over $150,000.

Despite the obstacle, the Airmen used their ingenuity and initiative to build the essential piece and saved Little Rock AFB $127,000.

"We patched the outer layer of the structure and completely remade the inner-skin of the part that allows gas to come through and keeps the wing from icing over," said Staff Sgt. Christopher Lahey, 19th AMXS Aircraft Structural Maintenance craftsman. "We've never done anything to that shape or that radius before which was challenging until we got the proper tools made from the Aircraft Metals Technology shop."

The structural Airmen worked closely with metals technology, employing their resources and manpower to create new tools and strengthen the structural integrity of the newly overhauled part.

Through a shared dedication for their work and 504 manhours, the technicians restored the leading edge of a once unserviceable aircraft.

"This is yet another mark that shows the expertise and professionalism of the maintenance shops in enabling Global Combat Airlift here at Little Rock," said 1st Lt. Deanthony Johnson, 19th AMXS Fabrications Flight commander.

USAF, Canadian forces partner for unique training

STORY AND PHOTOS BY STAFF SGT. JEREMY MCGUFFIN, 19TH AIRLIFT WING

The 41st Airlift Squadron loaded up with crews from the 61st Airlift Squadron, the 34th Training Squadron, maintainers and equipment into two C-130Js for a week of training in Edmonton, Canada.

The Royal Canadian Air Force, along with the 3rd Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, teamed up with the 19th Airlift Wing to participate in Canadian exercise Fanatic Pegasus which offered unique opportunities with our international partners and access to mountainous terrain and weather not found in Arkansas.

"The goal of participating in Fanatic Pegasus was to validate and build U.S. and Canada tactical airlift interoperability," said Capt. Michael Sadler, 41st Airlift Squadron Director of Staff. "The expeditionary scenario was put in place to better prepare our forces for future combined operations."

Little Rock Air Force Base squadrons routinely support operations all over the world. Participating in another country's exercise allowed the crews to have a whole new perspective in Combat Airlift.

"Even though we fly the same aircraft, there are a multitude of ways to employ this weapon system, and it was an incredible chance to see how our joint partners utilize the C-130J," said 1st Lt. Alexander Randall, 41st Airlift Squadron C-130J Pilot. "They have experience pushing this weapon system to its limit in an environment we don't get to see too often. Flying together through the mountains while practicing airdrops was challenging, but rewarding; it cultivated a sense of confidence and respect in each country's abilities, and the unique capabilities each of us can bring to the fight."

The Canadians offered many unique challenges that expanded each of the 19th Airlift Wing's crews skill set.

"Each country has its own set of tactics, techniques and procedures," Sadler said. "This exercise provided us with a unique opportunity to incorporate each other's strengths. Additionally, it facilitated our interoperability with our Canadian partners to evaluate and possibly incorporate into our operations."

Despite challenges such as language barriers and mission execution differences, the training was successful.

"Initial difficulties included understanding each other's procedures, such as approval of a Foreign Jurisdiction, through a training plan with the Joint Mobility Command's approval," said Capt. Sadler. "Getting the most out of the exercise was the goal."

As the training continued, the crews involved gained a better understanding of each other's capabilities and effectiveness.

"You can't brief too much on a mission, but we found that while much of the terrain was the same, the execution varied slightly. The exchange of ideas and concepts that we can bring to the future."

The discussions that occurred during the exercises became invaluable. The working rapport with Canadian forces will be a key factor in future combined operations.

The aircrews performed low-level flights, tested equipment and personnel while operating in the Rockies.

"These opportunities can be used to ensure we're taking advantage of each other's strengths in an event that allows us to interoperate with our allies."

See Page 10 for more photos.

Canadian Army Private Joshua Lafountain, 3rd Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry, gets fitted into his parachute and gear before boarding a 41st Airlift Squadron C-130J on April 22 in Alberta, Canada. The exercise Fanatic Pegasus focused on enhancing mobility partnerships between the U.S. and Canada in all aspects of Combat Airlift.

A Royal Canadian air force C-130J flies in formation with a U.S. Air Force C-130J from the 41st Airlift Squadron through the Canadian Rockies demonstrating low altitude high terrain evasion techniques April 20 in Alberta, Canada. This is the first time American forces have participated in the Canadian Fanatic Pegasus exercise, which establishes air and ground forces in unfamiliar terrain to work on communication and rapid deployment of those resources.
